

The Fog. The fog of this morning was the intensest we ever remember to have seen, and fully sustains the character of November, for this species of atmospheric annoyance. Up to nearly half-past twelve o'clock, candles were lighted at almost every house and shop in the Strand; and people went groping their way along the streets in perfect ignorance of their locality. About one o'clock, in the shape of a sun-beam came out, but instantly went in again; nor did day begin to make its appearance till nearly two o'clock, about which time the fog was lifted of itself. At the hour at which we were now writing (three o'clock,) the streets are tolerably clear of vapour.

LEAD KIDNAP. When Lord Chancellor, had upon one occasion, some difficult case before him for decision. Two persons whom he was entitled to considerable property, if he survived the other, were passengers on board the same vessel, which was unfortunately wrecked, and all on board perished. The question was, which of the two survived the other; and to determine this, there was produced a collection of evidence. His Lordship more than once mentioned the case in Court, and lamented the embarrassment he was in respecting it, but we never heard how he was actually got judgment upon it.

Dublin Evening Mail.

The following curious occurrence is mentioned in the Journal du Vauro:—"A short time ago, a hunter went out sporting on the banks of the Lake of Lucerne, in Switzerland, descended the foot of one of the neighbouring hills, and saw the Lemmings, a species of vulpine. He shot the male, and made his way along a narrow projection of the rock, with a view of taking the young birds. He had raised his arm, and put his hand into the nest, when the female, hovering over his head, unperceived by him, pounced

Down upon him, sped her talons in his arm, and she flew in his cage. To the astonishment of her slightest witnesses, must have precipitated to the bottom of the rock, with that noble and self-possession, no peculiar to the mountain-huntsman of that country, notwithstanding his pain he suffered, remained unmoved. Having thus secured his prey, he turned round, and flung against the face of the rock, pointed to the breast of the bird, and with his eye, as they always go hand-in-hand, the better to enable them to hold and climb the rocks, he killed his enemy on the spot. Had the bird been any where else, he would have been sure to have killed it. He procured assistance from the anbergs (otter) hard by, and brought the two birds on trophies of his valour away with him. Some of these birds have been known to measure seventeen feet from tip to tip of the wings, and are usually killed in sim by the Cander of Southern America.

RECIPROCAL FORGETFULNESS.—Captain R—N, of this port, who had been from home about a year and a half, wrote to inform his wife that he had arrived in London, and intended to be at Barton, where he wished her to meet him on a certain day, which he named. The lady was punctual to the appointment, and so was the captain. They met at the Waterside Hotel, and, strange to say, did not know each other. At length Miss R—N became restless and impatient, frequently going to a window and "peering out" in the direction of the London road. This the captain observed for some time in silence, but at last ventured to ask her if she was waiting for any person. "I expect my husband, Captain R—N, will be here very soon," answered the lady. "His name" explained the captain, "is Barton." "Oh, yes," said she, "I feel bound if I know your colour." The result of the discovery was, a friendly hint and mutual congratulations.—Hull Morning Star.

TOBACCO.—Arrived since our last, 71 bags-heads. Cleared in the same time, for Cadiz, 30; Alcantara, 307; Boston, 37; New York, 6; in all, 373 bags. With the exception of a few bbls. by retail, we have no sales to mention, and know only one or first hands for sale; say about 100 bbls.

FRUITING.—Our port is full of first rate vessels waiting for freight, and but few loading, which causes the rates to be quite uncertain, except the little done for France.

YORK, U. C. Dec. 18.—A man named James Redmond, of York, formerly a sailing master, 'forfeited' his ship on his way back from a Raining, on Friday evening last, knocked down, and so immensely kicked and abused, that he died on Tuesday. The coroner went down yesterday to hold an inquest upon the body, and after a trial of evidence, the jury, we hear, re-

REMARKABLE CONJUNCTION.—On the Christmas day of 1824, at 7 o'clock, A. M. the thermometer stood at 32° below zero, at 8 o'clock, 30° below zero, the wind blowing in a westerly direction. On Christmas day of the present year, at 7 o'clock, A. M. the thermometer stood, in the shade, at 18°, and at 8 o'clock,
A. M. it had dropped to 16°. At 9 o'clock, it had suddenly advanced to the greater sun, but being a little more cloudy in the fore part of the day. In 1826, the observation first made on the thermometer in the College, on the Pennsylvania road, was on the 25th of December, at 10 o'clock, A. M. the thermometer stood, on the Pennsylvania road, in the Philadelphia street cross, Arch street, above Second street.
